OFFICER COMMENT

Rabbits are a declared pest under Western Australia's Biosecurity and Agriculture Management Act 2007 and land managers are legally obligated to control rabbits.

Rabbit populations throughout the townsites in the Shire continue to grow even with a long hot dry summer. Ranger Services have received a high number of complaints and requests for action to control the increasing numbers.

The best practice to control rabbits is an integrated program of biological control. RHDV can be obtained in the form of a naturally occurring variant strain RHDV1-K5 from the Department of Primary Industries (DPI) NSW. It is a restricted chemical product commercially available to authorised users. RDHV strains are completely specific to rabbits and will not infect any other animal nor impact an animal if a rabbit is ingested. The virus is predominantly spread by flying and biting insects and rabbit to rabbit contact.

The preferred window of opportunity to undertake virus release is late Spring (mid-late October) or Autumn (March). Baiting will be carried out by pre-feeding using oats two to three days prior to laying the virus.

Any rabbit, both wild and domestic, are at risk of contracting RHDV with the disease having the capability to travel large distances. The only way to protect domestic rabbits from RHDV is to have them appropriately vaccinated by veterinary services. An advertising campaign will be essential prior to release of the virus.

Simple Majority

OFFICER RECOMMENDATION

That Council:

1. Approves the purchase and distribution of the rabbit haemorrhagic virus (RHDV1-K5) for use within the Shire of Plantagenet.
